committed $55 million in property tax relief. You have said, and we've abided by that, that that's more important, to give property tax relief, than to do some of the things that are on this agenda. So we are forced or faced, if you will, to...to fund some of these things that we have in this particular bill that we think are critical to the state of Nebraska's future in the big picture. That includes, in this case, Sheldon, university health costs, all of those things that we have had throughout the years. If we really...who is going to take care of the state of Nebraska's situation if we don't, I say as the Legislature? There's many proposals in for property tax relief. We have said, I mean, if you really want to cut that out year problem, don't do property tax relief. That will cut that out year significantly, for example. Particularly the easy one would be the $30 million. So we have made that decision philosophically, but we're going to have to continue to face it in the next year. Are we going to do property tax relief across this state in different forms? And that can be clerk of the district courts, can be courts, it can be as direct property tax relief to state colleges, it can be additional money for special ed (inaudible), we can go to 47, 46, 45 percent for school aid. But then who is going to take care of our Sheldons and our state historical societies, and have adequate salary base for our employees and on, and on, and on, and on? Well, that's the dilemma we face year after year. I predicted that this kind of squeeze was going to happen now because we've made, I think, a very large commitment to property tax relief, even though it's not going to be maybe significant on an individual basis. But, by and large, we've made that commitment so we have to fit our budget within that now because there's no money to go anywhere else, and we still have bills here that many of you want, including myself. So next year I predict it's going to be even tougher, especially if we keep on the line of property tax relief, which we all want to do politically. I understand that just as well as anyone. But the time is coming when we focus on higher education in this state, or historical society, or the Sheldon, or the University of Nebraska, or on and on and on. We can gnash our teeth about the way some of that is being managed, and I'm not saying there's not some things that shouldn't be discussed and I think they will be, but...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: One minute.
